- Three months, twice a week, for two hours each day. Worked with nineteen elementary school students (3rd-5th grade) and helped them write, create, and perform a short play. Through drama activities, they learned the essential tools of theatre, including improvisation, character and story development, staging, vocal projection, and the communication of emotion. Writing exercises taught the elements of storytelling. There is typically a culminating event where the students are brought to the Queens Theatre and given the chance to perform on the mainstage with a professional director. The culminating performance and some classes happened online, due to the Covid-19 pandemic.
